Power, Structural and Technical Systems

♡ Favorite

Overview

People who work in the Power, Structural and Technical Systems pathway apply knowledge of engineering, hydraulics, pneumatics, electronics, power, structures, and controls to the field of agriculture. They design agricultural structures as well as machinery and equipment. They develop ways to conserve soil and water and to improve the processing of agricultural products.

Credentials

- All levels of postsecondary degrees and certificates are available. Degrees range from an associate degree to a Ph.D., and certifications include Certified Welding Machine Operator, Certified Safety Professional, Certified Machinist, Structural Engineer and others.
- Machinists who operate computer-control programmers train in various ways-in apprenticeship programs, informally on the job and in secondary, technical or postsecondary schools.

Employment Outlook

Employment of individuals in the Power, Structural and Technical Systems pathway is expected to grow slower than the average for all occupations through 2024. However, the need to increase the efficiency of agricultural production systems and to reduce environmental damage should maintain demand for these workers. New, more efficient designs for traditional agricultural engineering projects such as irrigation, storage, and worker safety systems will also maintain demand for these workers. Growing populations and stronger global competition will continue to pressure farmers to find more efficient means of production, and toward this end, they will need agricultural engineers.
